

This file picks up the trail as indicated on GVR02T and is intended to inform people using motorised scooters. Where the trail splits as shown, take the left route through the gateway (over one metre wide and no closing devices). The right fork leads to the Goyt Forest / Hoo Moor trail.

The next image is a view on the trail. A dismal and misty day when these images were shot but the logs have long since disappeared..

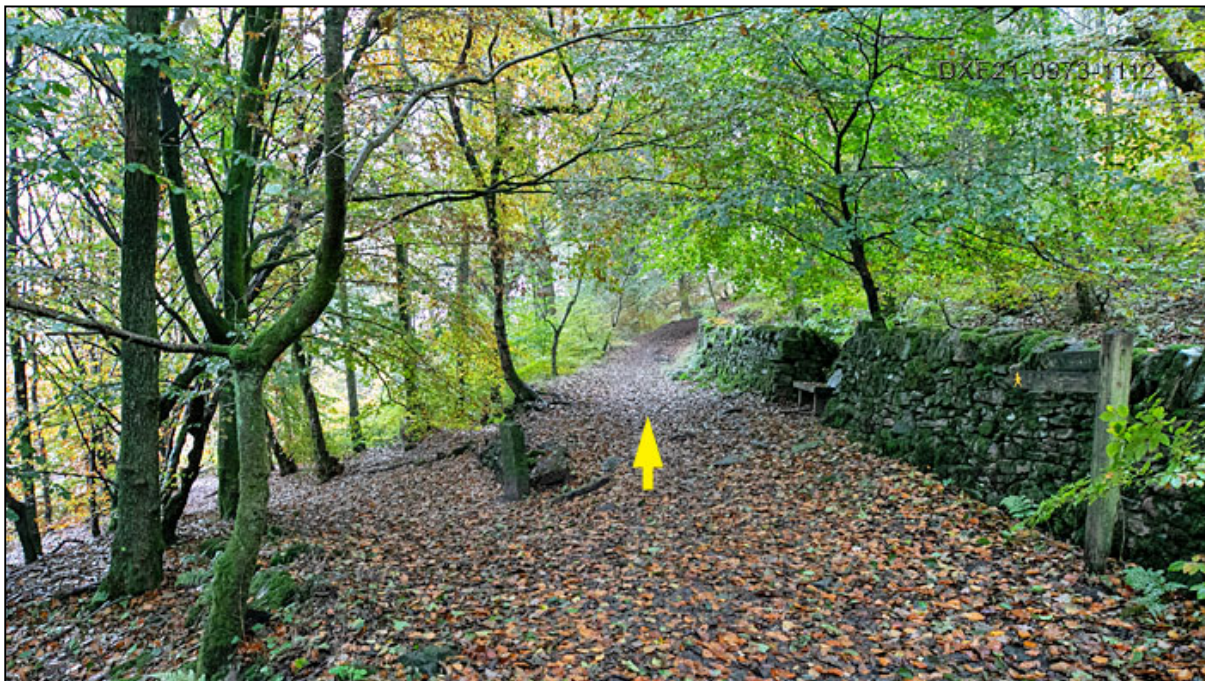

The next image shows the first fork in the trail. The left fork leads along the waterside route. Impassable to motorised scooters but not a route I would ordinarily use as it is not as interesting as the middle route.

The middle route is covered with rich dense mats of mosses and lichens on the walls. Safe harbours for Common Lizards and all sorts of invertebrates which I have also seen along this route. There are also numerous joining streams worth exploring in season. One or two mini-fords..

Further long the trail there is another signposted fork. Stick with the middle route along the rich trail. Lumpy in parts but the balloon tyres on the heavy duty motorised scooters should cope well enough

As you can see from the image below, the trail continues to deliver plenty of interest. Endless vegetation and walls to explore.

The final image shows the end of the trail for motorised scooters at the current time. This bridge is too narrow to navigate and the terrain rises, quickly and unevenly afterwards.

Still well worth a visit.
